Potential Class B2 Director

Candidate

John A. Fry
President
Drexel University

John A. Fry, appointed in 2010 as Drexel University's 14th president, has served higher education for his entire professional life. As a consultant, board member, COO, and CEO, he has developed an in-depth understanding of the challenges involved in leading a major educational institution. Under Fry's leadership, Drexel is setting a new standard for cooperative education, transforming its online and hybrid offerings, and becoming a force for economic development in the Greater Philadelphia region. Fry came to Drexel from Franklin & Marshall College, where he was president starting in 2002 and instrumental in the college's academic growth, campus and neighborhood development, and improved financials. From 1995 to 2002, he was executive vice president of the University of Pennsylvania where he developed and implemented Penn's "Agenda for Excellence," a comprehensive plan that guided strategic initiatives from 1996 to 2001. He also built a coalition of nonprofit, business, neighborhood, and governmental organizations in support of a multipronged strategy to address the key challenges facing the University City neighborhood in West Philadelphia. Before joining Penn, he was a management consultant for the higher education and nonprofit sectors.
